Chippewas at Pageant Had Heap Good Time

The biggest Indian pow-wow during the pageant was not on the program at all. The braves apparently had held a private council and laid their plans, for when Huron H. Smith, curator of botany at the public museum, and Dr. S. A. Barrett, director of the museum, walked into the Indian village in Juneau park Sun-

Barrett and Mr. Smith as representatives of Milwaukee and the pageant managers.

"We starved in Chicago and had to buy our own tobacco," explained one of the Indians afterwards. "Here we have plenty to eat and lots of tobacco. Everybody treats us fine." At the conclusion of the speeches by the chiefs, the Indians crowded

Where Planes Visited

Milwaukee was an air center Sunday when approximately 60 planes, including local machines and those of the Reliability tour, were here. Above is a view of Hamilton airport with the crowds swarming around planes on the ground. Below is a picture of contrasts, the big Ford 3-motor, all-metal monoplane, shielding under its wing the tiny Griggs 2-cylinder monoplane.
